

Current trend in Crypto world is moving from real world to virtual world like NFT, Metaverse, etc

LondonCoin is in real world to make it better.

According to Skew, the current market value of ETH accounts for 41% of BTC, which has doubled compared to the beginning of this year. It reached a maximum of 85% in 2017.

It takes 10 years since the original invention that other can take over the original

Striking a balance

As national currency, cryptoassets—including Bitcoin—come with substantial risks to macro-financial stability, financial integrity, consumer protection, and the environment. The advantages of their underlying technologies, including the potential for cheaper and more inclusive financial services, should not be overlooked. Governments, however, need to step up to provide these services, and leverage new digital forms of money while preserving stability, efficiency, equality, and environmental sustainability. Attempting to make cryptoassets a national currency is an inadvisable shortcut.

Kate just sent some LDX from ABM wallet:

Less than 3 days until McDonald's, Walmart, and any other major US company operating in El Salvador begin accepting #Bitcoin  . Are you still bearish?

@SGBarbour

The world is acting crazy right now because the world is insolvent. Banks, governments, underwriters, megacorps... they are all bankrupt and operating on borrowed time. Only new ownership via debt jubilee will resolve this problem.

Usually this means bull market

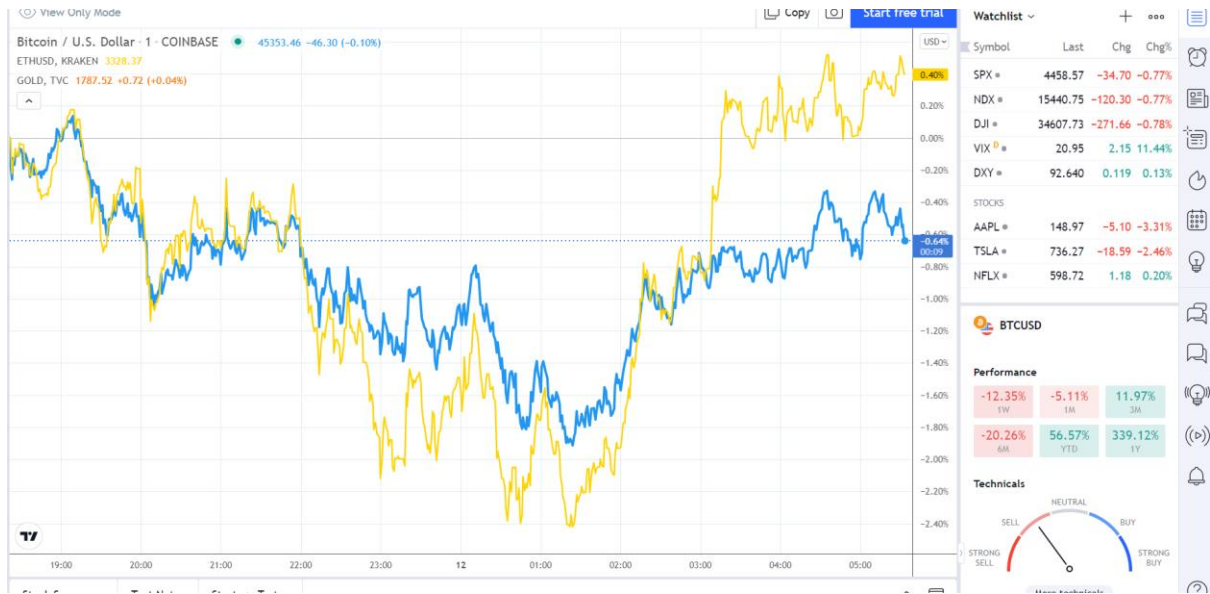

According to glassnode, the number of addresses holding 1,000+ bitcoins is only 2,125, a 15-month low.

This always happen when they only buy to pump it and then they sell for profit. What sense have to hold something falling. Read Dow Jones Theory. Third wave not mean anything to investors. They sell already in may.

The more worth BTC becomes, the less you want to have +1,000 in just one wallet. They probably just split their wallets.

Just cool down .. it is interesting to note.
